Saturday,
February 26th
1-3 pm

This book presents an oral history of the former ManRay nightclub, in Cambridge, MA, told by those that managed, worked, and attended the club. This includes interviews with creative forces, managers, DJs, artists, musicians, and the employees that made the club what it was. The remembrances and memories of those that danced and gathered there exemplified how ManRay was a haven for many individuals and communities that sought social acceptance and freedom of expression.

Shawn Driscoll is a historian, writer and researcher.

He is graduate of Worcester State University (B.A 2013, M.A. 2017) and is currently a Doctoral Research Fellow in the Global Studies Department at the University of Massachusetts—Lowell. Shawn's work has been published in several books, including They Ventured Far, Hollywood Heroines, and his first co-created, co-edited work The Grip—The 1918 Pandemic and a City Under Siege. He has presented papers at several conferences including the World History Association, Popular Culture Association, and Boston University's American Political History Institute.
